ARGUMENT IN FAVOR OF MEASURE C

This year the Council appointed an Ad Hoc Committee, composed of government and business financial experts, to review the City's financial administration. As a result of their study, the Ad Hoc Committee recommended the Charter be amended to change the City Controller position to that of City Auditor and for the first time place annual and periodic audit requirements into the Charter. The City Auditor will be appointed by the Council, as is the current City Controller, and will be independent of other City departments.

These amendments should be adopted for the following reasons:
First, Measure C will provide an independent source of financial information for the City Council and the public. The Independent Auditor would provide verification of financial information within Palo Alto city government and would supervise the Charter-required annual and periodic audits.
Second, the proposal will streamline the financial administration of city government. Currently, the Controller performs many day-to-day functions that are tied very closely to the activities of City departments which report to the City Manager. Financial administration and budget implementation are critical to efficient management of the City. Under the proposal, strictly administrative functions will be switched to a financial officer reporting to the City Manager. This will better integrate financial administration with day-to-day City operations and provide clearer lines of responsibility.
Finally, the proposal will bring the organizational structure of Palo Alto city government in line with similar city governments in California. An independent consultant's study commissioned by the City Council concluded that Palo Alto's structure calling for an Independent City Auditor was the only one of its kind in the State and that there were no strong arguments for retaining it. The proposed restructuring will be in accord with modern financial practice.

We strongly recommend the adoption of Measure C.
