

Public Art Commission: Nia Taylor

Hello! I am Nia Taylor. I was born and raised in Palo Alto, although I spent six lovely years after high school on the East Coast. I am an artist, educator and community activist who spends her days teaching children in both formal and informal settings throughout the Peninsula.

I joined the Public Art Commission so that I could help make Palo Alto a beautiful and attractive city to work, live and visit, thanks to its diverse collection of public art. When I am not attending Public Art Commission meetings or working, I like to spend my time traveling, reading a good book, baking and being active.
